THE Gentleman's Magazine: JANUARY, 1731.

A View of the WEEKLY ESSAYS in this Month.

The Craftsman, by Caleb D'anvers Esq; and Mr Oldcaſtle. Jan. 2. No. 235.

MR. Oldcaſtle having begun his remarks on the conduct of the Kings of England, to ſhew how the ſpirit of Faction, and the ſpirit of Liberty had exerted themſelves at different times and occaſions, had brought his Obſervations down to the reign of Q. Elizabeth. He begins No. 234, with an Eulogium upon her prudent conduct in the moſt arduous difficulties that attended her acceſſion to the Throne. Theſe difficulties he explains at large, and goes on No. 235, to ſpeak more largely of the means whereby ſhe eſtabliſh'd her glory and confirm'd herſelf in the affections of her People. Her firſt principle was to be neither fear'd nor deſpis'd by thoſe ſhe govern'd. He mentions ſome inſtances wherein ſhe diſcover'd her wiſdom in both theſe reſpects, particularly in maintaining her Prerogative, which altho' ſhe was fond of, yet took care it never ſhould be grievous, or if it ſhould happen ſo to particular perſons, that it ſhould appear ſpecious to the publick. The effects, he ſays, of a bare-fac'd Prerogative are not ſo dangerous to Liberty as the attempts which are made to ſurprize and undermine it. Wherefore Q. Eliz. never kept up a ſtanding Army, but placed her ſecurity in the affection of her People. With reſpect to parties he extols her moderation and equity, by which conduct ſhe ſtood on firmer ground, and had leſs to fear from the ſpirit of Faction. She neither haſtily eſpouſed the party which ſhe favour'd, nor inflam'd the ſpirits of the adverſe party. The Papiſts and Puritans ſhe uſed with lenity, 'till their evil practices made it neceſſary to execute rigours, and even then ſhe diſtinguiſhed Papiſts in conſcience from Papiſts in Faction, nor condemn'd the Zeal of the Puritans, but ſometimes cenſured their Violence. He ſays from Cambden, ſhe beſtowed her favours with ſo much caution, and ſo little diſtinction, as to prevent either party from gaining the aſcendant over her, whereby ſhe remained Miſtreſs of her own ſelf, and preſerved both their affections and her own power and authority entire.

He proceeds to juſtify Q. Eliz. from the imputation of avarice, by obſerving that ſhe neither hoarded up, nor was laviſh of the publick money. Quotes a ſaying of the famous Burleigh, that, He never cared to ſee the treaſury ſwell like a diſorder'd ſpleen, when the other parts of the common-wealth were in a Conſumption; and his miſtreſs thought that money in the pockets of her ſubjects was better than in her own.

It was her maxim to ſave for the publick not for herſelf, and to meaſure her riches by the riches of the nation; refuſed ſupplies offered, and remitted payment of ſupplies granted, when the publick ſervice did not require it. The two great principles of her Œconomy were 1ſt. Not ſuffering her Officers to enrich themſelves by fraud or clandeſtine management. 2d. Never attempting to do any thing with money that could be done with wiſdom or courage. (See p. 319.) For which cites ſeveral inſtances; and obſerves how greatly ſhe promoted commerce, and increaſed the fleet of England, which before was inconſiderable. Jan.

Jan. 9. Craftsman, No. 236.

ALL his oratory here is pointed at the perſon of a certain great man whom he repreſents as affecting all the qualities and requiſites of the moſt conſummate ſtateſman, without any qualifications in him neceſſary for ſo high a poſt. He ridicules him for a ready habit of lying, becauſe it is ſometimes proper for a politician to conceal the truth: Charges him with a dark myſterious proceeding on all Occaſions, becauſe ſecrecy is requir'd in a ſtateſman, and adds, that 'tis a proof that his ſecret ſervices are great by the large ſums requir'd for carrying them on. Says, good Intelligence is another excellent property in an able ſtateſman, and therefore our mock-miniſter apes him in this particular; gives a long detail of inſtances to illuſtrate what he advances.

Confeſſes, indeed, that the fluctuation of affairs hath oblig'd the miniſtry to go from court to court; to make treaties, which (as obſerv'd by the author of the London Journal) it is by no means proper to execute —— and adds, They found us engag'd in a treaty with the Emperor; but they have very wiſely vary'd from it —— They made a Treaty with France; and have hitherto very wiſely obſerv'd it —— they ſent a large ſquadron of ſhips, with an hoſtile appearance, and without any declaration of war, into the Weſt-Indies; but they wiſely gave the Admiral inſtructions not to make uſe of any other force than perſwaſion —— They ſent another ſquadron into the Baltick; and a third into the Mediterranean; but they very wiſely gave the Commanders of them the ſame pacifick Inſtructions; even tho' Spain was actually at war with us, and attacking one of our moſt valuable poſſeſſions —— They afterwards enter'd into a treaty with Spain; but they have hitherto very wiſely declin'd to put it in execution; and if they are now negotiating another treaty at Vienna, as we have been told, I doubt not that the ſame wiſdom will appear in it, whether it is deſign'd to be put in execution or not.

He concludes by reducing his harangue into a kind of problematical order, and makes a great many bold interrogatories, the anſwering of which, he imagines, would lay his opponents under the dilemma, of diſapproving their own conduct, or allowing the juſtneſs of his arguments; ſuch as theſe; Will our M —— r execute the treaty of Seville, or will he not? would a Reconciliation at Vienna, tho' juſtifiable in other perſons, be ſo in him? hath not the Emperor ſhewn that he does not fear us? will he not affect to ſhow that he doth not want us? and many other queries to the like purpoſe. See London Journal of the 16th. p. 6, 7. and Free Briton of the 14th, p. 16, 17.

Craftsman, Jan. 16. No. 237.

COmplains of the hardſhip that the authors of the Craftsman lye under; that a certain gentleman makes uſe of his authority to reſtrain their pens, while he employs others to throw about ſcandal at random; and others are ſuffer'd to call the authors of the Craftsman, traytors and villains!

Makes ſome reflections on the London Journal Jan. 9. which had took to pieces his Hague Letter, concerning the report of a negotiation at Vienna.

Mr Osborne in the London Journal having expoſed a paradox from the Craftsman, that the miniſtry are never right; when they do what the Craftsmen count wroung; and yet wrong, when they do what the Craftsmen count right; the Craftsman obſerves, that 'tis allow'd that an accommodation with the Emperor is a right meaſure, but attended with fatal conſequences, and almoſt inſuperable difficulties; becauſe ſuch meaſures might be reſented by other courts as an infraction of treaties, which Mr. Osborne ſays, were only occaſional and temporal.

The Craftsman ſuppoſes theſe alliances to be ſuch, but then asks, Will our allies underſtand 'em in the ſame ſenſe?

ſenſe? If not, what may be the conſequences?

As to what the Craftſman had granted, that the fulneſs of time was come to deſert one ally, and to Mr. Osborne's reaſons for ſuch deſertion, he replies by demanding, Whether it was not equally reaſonable long ago?

Osborne had ask'd —— if upon the non-execution of this treaty, occaſion'd by the different views of the allies, another court ſhould grow ſtubborn, what muſt we do? This the Craftſman anſwers by another queſtion, that is, Whether the different views of the allies do not proceed from their different intereſts?

Craftſman, Jan. 23. No. 238.

From the Minutes of Mr. Oldcaſtle.

THIS paper continues remarks on Q. Elizabeth's reign; and is a long Encomium on her management of treaties with foreign powers, which ſhe always conducted in ſuch a manner as was beſt ſuited to the good of her people and the honour and dignity of the nation. Her Miniſtry went wiſely and ſteadily on to their own great purpoſes of preſerving the peace of Europe, and the trade and proſperity of the Kingdom. (See Free Brit. p. 8, 326.)

Craftſman, Jan. 30. No. 239.

MAintains the liberty of the Preſs, in oppoſition to thoſe who argue for the neceſſity of ſome reſtraint, which, if granted, he ſays, might be made uſe of to deſtroy all news-papers whatſoever, except the Gazette.

After repeating moſt of the points in debate, he defends his Hague letter (for which the government thought fit to call him to an account) in as much as there was nothing in it aſſerted, but only ſuppoſed; and adds, he has as much right to reaſon upon ſuppoſitions as Mr. Osborne; and to cenſure the conduct of miniſters, as he hath to approve it; for unleſs the right is reciprocal, the liberty of the preſs is no liberty at all.

As to what Mr. Walſingham had allow'd, that we have a right to reaſon upon political affairs, tho' not to lay down falſe facts; he replies, that he has aſſerted no falſhoods, and only exerciſed the natural right of every Free Briton, to offer his opinion on affairs.

Concludes with ſaying, that if he ſhould be call'd upon to defend himſelf in a court of juſtice he muſt ſubmit to the law, and abide the judgment of his country. See p. 298.

London Journal. Jan. 2. No. 596. againſt the Craftſman, No. 233.

THE Craftſman having in his ſaid Journal advanced ſeveral arguments for the diſbanding the Army and repealing the Riot Act, the Author of the London Journal undertakes here to confute them. He admits that a Government ought to have no more power than is neceſſary for the ſafety and protection, the preſervation and happineſs of the people, but adds that the laws alone, without a power to execute, and provide againſt all ſudden emergencies, and poſſible dangers, will not anſwer theſe ends. Aſſerts that the poſſibility of powers being abuſed is not a ſufficient reaſon to ſtrip the Government of ſuch a ſecurity, or to lodge the ſafety of the King in the affections of the people, which are variable and eaſily ſeduced, and (as the Craftſman allows) very precarious, when he makes a doubt whether his preſent Majeſty enjoys them. Not only Armies and Riot Acts, but even the very law itſelf, by ill deſigning men may be uſed for our deſtruction, which were made for our ſafety. But muſt we part with the law, becauſe we may ſuffer by the law? Every nation round us is arm'd, and muſt we alone ſtand naked and defenceleſs? If the liberties of many nations have been deſtroy'd by ſtanding armies, the liberties of many have been preſerv'd by them. Mentions tions the Revolution as an inſtance, and believes the Pr. of Orange would not have ſo eaſily ſucceeded, had the army been as true to the King as they were to their country. That the diſbanding the army after the peace of Riſwick embolden'd the French King to ſet his Grandſon on the Throne of Spain, and declare the Pretender, which involv'd us in a ten years war: That nothing more intimidated the Miniſtry in the laſt four years of Q. Anne's reign, than the honeſty and bravery of the gentlemen of the army.

As to the riot act, he ſays that power is neceſſary to prevent riots and tumults, and to diſperſe the people when ſo aſſembled. To this purpoſe a law is made which tells them the conſequences of it; a proper officer gives them warning; and if after this they will ſtay and be hang'd, 'tis their own fault.

He allows, that ſhou'd a Juſtice of the peace aſſume the liberty of reading the proclamation where a member of parliament is chuſing, he ought to be hang'd. He don't ſee how this act can injure us any other way; for while the conſtitution is preſerv'd, and our liberties taken care of by the government, the people can't be unjuſtly hurt by it.

The remaining part of his diſcourſe is ſpent in ſetting forth the unreaſonableneſs of repealing this act, from the behaviour of the authors of the Craftſman and their abettors, who by their conduct in exciting uneaſineſs in the people, have made it neceſſary to continue it in force.

London Journal, Jan. 9, No. 597.

CONtains remarks upon a paper in the Craftſman, called, An extract of a letter from the Hague.

The author begins with obſerving, that tho' the pretence of the Craftſman is liberty and patriotiſm, yet his real deſign is oppoſition to the court.

He then reflects on the Craftſman's incoherent way of arguing, juſt as it ſerves to vent his ſpleen; for according to him the miniſtry are never right when they do what he counts wrong, and always wrong when they do what the Craftſman counts right.

When we were broken with the Emperor we were quite wrong, and now we are going to unite with the Emperor we are equally wrong.

This paper, or letter, the Journaliſt ſays, is made up of mere conjectures, and ſuppoſitions; or elſe inſinuations, unſupported by facts or reaſon: juſtifies our miniſtry from the aſperſion that we are undoing what we have been doing theſe five years; and inſiſts that we have been continuing to do the ſame thing, that is, purſuing the peace and happineſs of the nation by different means, as alterations happen'd, or circumſtances varied.

He then anſwers the Craftſman's charge of deſerting one ally, by ſuppoſing that this ally may have views inconſiſtent with the two other allies, and ſo ſtand diſpoſed to act contrary to the deſign of that treaty and our intereſt. England is not obliged to execute the treaty, unleſs the other allies will act their part.

The Craftſman charges the miniſtry with obſtinate perſeverance in bad meaſures, and now with a precipitate alteration of councils. This the author of this Journal denies, and ſays, it ſhould be more juſtly called, a wiſe and prudent accommodating themſelves to the late unfortunate juncture of affairs. Changing hands is not an alteration of councils, but a conduct which wiſe and honeſt men ought to obſerve.

London Journal, Jan. 16. No. 598.

Reflections on the preſent State of Affairs, occaſion'd by the Craftſman, Jan. 9.

HE takes notice of the Craftſman's method of drawing of characters, in which he offends all the laws of honeſty, propriety and decorum; charges without evidence or reaſon, and and without common ſenſe; makes his Mock-miniſter a compoſition of inſolence, malice, and a ſmall talent for ridicule, yet is not half ſo odious as the Mock-patriot who dreſt him; who, while he counterfeits publick virtue, is infamouſly abuſing the publick: clothes himſelf with the love of his country, while he is making a jeſt of it; and injures the community, while he pretends the higheſt regard for it; and who, becauſe we have tried all poſſible ways to preſerve the peace, calls our miniſters Dupes of all the powers of Europe, political Mendicants, ſtrolling about from court to court.

The Craftſman having advanc'd, that we are inexcuſeable for not having foreſeen and prevented theſe conjunctures in which nothing can be done which is not a fault to do; our author asks, what conjunctures thoſe are, in which a man is not at liberty to act reaſonably and honeſtly? or can it be a fault ſo to act?

By the treaty of Seville we only yielded to Spain a point, which, in real intereſt, concerned ſome of the contending powers. It could hardly be imagin'd that the Emperor would have put himſelf to the expence, or hazard of a war, for the ſmall deviation of the Quadruple Alliance, had he not been informed, that the allies could not agree about the war; or that they diſagreed about the ſcene of action; or, for the ſake of peace, the allies might all concur to wait one Year to ſee what the Emperor would do. Any of theſe ſuppoſitions affords a reaſon why the treaty of Seville is not yet executed.

As to the queries put by the craftſman, (p. 4.) they are all ask'd for the ſake of the two laſt, which demand, Will not this meaſure of making up with the Emperor be attended with worſe conſequences than turning out the miniſter? and —— Will the objections againſt it, be ſo ſtrong, if manag'd by another hand? —— he anſwers no; for perſons don't alter the relation of things, or change the nature of actions. If it is reaſonable, 'tis equally ſo whoever does it.

London Journal, Jan. 23. No. 599.

BY the behaviour of the miniſtry for ſome years paſt, it evidently appears, that the preſerving the peace of Europe, and ſecuring the trade and proſperity of the kingdom, has been their greateſt concern; but whether means taken to that end have been always right, is not ſo eaſily determin'd.

The ſword indeed might have cut our way to peace, and added to our glory, but the event might have prov'd a general war. —— Our miniſtry thought wiſdom better than power. To this end, when our enemies arm'd we put ourſelves in a poſture of defence; we ſuffer'd little inſults, as a proof that we were willing to be one with a nation with whom it is our intereſt to be one. To this end we united thoſe who were diſjoin'd, and ſeparated thoſe who were united; ſtill avoiding a war.

But while the miniſtry have been induſtrious in preventing confuſions, and watching opportunities of accommodating differences, their adverſaries have practis'd all imaginary ways to inſult and embarraſs them.

Osborne clears himſelf from the imputation which the Craftſman had charg'd him with, viz. that the ſuppoſition that we are going to unite with the Emperor, will be attended with perfidy, infraction of treaties, and violation of faith.

London Journal, Jan. 30. No. 600.

THIS Journal contains obſervations on Mr. Oldcaſtle's minutes of Q. Elizabeth's reign, which he affirms is a collection of Scraps without order or method, coherence or connexion, being ſounds without ſenſe, confuſedly thrown at the preſent adminiſtration. See p. 3.

Admits

Admits that this Queen was a wiſe and glorious Princeſs, but ſays that our Conſtitution, and the exerciſe of Power at home, is vaſtly better than what they were in her reign, and our Foreign Affairs tranſacted with as much wiſdom.

Quotes Mr. Oldcaſtle's own words, in which he deſcribes the Wiſdom and Addreſs of Q. Elizabeth, to deſcribe the Wiſdom and Addreſs of the preſent Miniſter in negotiating Foreign Affairs. (See p. 3.)

Laſtly, he gives ſeveral maxims out of Cambden and Francis Osborne's memoirs of this Queen, ſuch as her preferring peace to war; her delaying reſentment of injuries till proper ſeaſons; her judgment of her ſubjects abilities, which ſhe dextrouſly fitted for her favours and their employments; her ſteady reſolution not to ranſom herſelf from her enemies at the price of their preferments who lov'd her.

Fog's Journal, Saturday, January 9. No. 120.

A Letter is inſerted, containing remarks on Mr. Chubb's diſcourſe concerning Reaſon, in which is aſſerted, that it either is, or ought to be a ſufficient guide in matters of Religion.

This Propoſition the remarker explains in the words of Mr. Chubb, and aſſents to, and then proceeds to conſider it more particularly. Does not comprehend Mr. Chubb's obſervation, i. e. The Queſtion is not whether there be abſolutely ſuch a capacity in man: for if man has ſuch a capacity, as Mr. Chubb inſiſts, he may be truly ſaid to be the poſſeſſor of it. Nor can the remarker underſtand the ſenſe of that clauſe, he ought to have, becauſe it has no relation to the diſpute between Mr. Chubb and the Bp of London, i. e. what man now has, and is capable of.

The remarker goes on to ſhew, that the author's argument to prove that man ought to have ſuch a capacity, is needleſs, becauſe it is univerſally aſſented to.

Mr. Chubb argues, That as our ſpecies was no ways acceſſary to Adam's tranſgreſſion, 'tis unreaſonable and unequal that they ſhould ſuffer by it.

To this is anſwer'd, that there are other difficulties in the general ſcheme of providence as hard to be ſolved; as that, whole families are involved in miſery by the miſmanagement of their anceſtor; the entailment of chronick and terrible diſorders on children by the debaucheries of a father, for that it is wrong intolerable, and againſt reaſon to puniſh children for the crimes of their fathers. But all theſe difficulties which ſeem to claſh with the wiſdom and goodneſs of God, are rectify'd in a future ſtate, for which we are manifeſtly fitted and deſign'd.

Fog's Journal, Jan. 16. No. 121.

THis paper begins with a piece of humourous irony; obſerving that as criticks never appear ſo diſappointed as when they meet with beauties in an author; ſo the preſent ſett of diſaffected political writers conceive no ſmall joy to ſee their country involv'd in difficulties; nor can they be worſe mortified than to ſee this nation flouriſh in trade, wealth and credit.

That Osborne (writer of the London Journal) and Walſingham (of the Free Briton) affirm, That the preſent crew of factious writers proceeds on this principle. Deſcants upon the meaſures for ſome years paſt; the deſtruction of the Spaniſh Fleet in the Mediterranean, whereby Sicily was gain'd for the Emperor, and the preſervation of the balance of Europe ſo ill ſettled by that wicked treaty of Utrecht.

Mentions ſome of the great Actions which have ſtirr'd up the envy of the diſaffected; as, the ſending annual fleets into the Baltick; the treaty of Hanover; the maintaining a body of Heſſian troops; ſending ſquadrons to the coaſts of Spain and the Weſt-Indies, the expedition to Spithead, and laſtly, the treaty of Seville. This laſt, he ironically ſays, had like to have kill'd

the diſaffected quite, becauſe it was ſo wiſely calculated for eſtabliſhing a general tranquillity, and for the advancing the trade of Great Britain!

He goes on throwing his ſarcaſms at the writers on the ſide of the preſent miniſtry, who having challeng'd the diſaffected to ſhow any one ſtep taken deſtructive of the true intereſt of their country, inſtances in the opening the harbour of Dunkirk, the Iſland of St. Lucia planted by the French; raiſing recruits in Ireland for the ſervice of France; all which the two writers aforemention'd, convinced the world were groundleſs, by telling the authors of theſe reports, they lyed.

He makes ſome reflections on Mr. Osborne's obſervations of the ill conduct of the miniſtry in the latter end of Q. Anne's reign; as the endeavours to break the power of the Diſſenters, and to weaken the ſecurity of the Hanover ſucceſſion; ſetting aſide the Quaker's affirmation; the diſbanding the army. All which Fog laughs at! and concludes with his ſurprize, that when he conſiders with how much good ſenſe theſe two writers have expoſed the actions of that Tory miniſtry, and how they have defended the meaſures of the preſent, there ſhould be a diſaffected perſon left in the kingdom.

Fog's Journal, Jan. 23. No. 123.

THIS Paper conſiſts of reflections on a pamphlet, intituled, A Defence of the Meaſures of the preſent Adminiſtration.

He begins with the obſervation which the author had made: "That "complaints and outcries are no "foundation for ſuppoſing defects in "publick counſels; for in a frame of "government like ours, a continu-"ance of the ſame adminiſtration "will always leſſen the popularity of "the miniſtry.

"The frequent uſe of this obſer-"vation, Fog ſays, is enough to ſhew "its good ſenſe. 'Twas firſt ſtarted "by the Rev. Author of the Enquiry, "all the anniverſary pamphlets have "had it ſince, and it has been re-"peated by Mr. Osborne 75 times; "by Mr. Walſingham twice as many; "nor is there any thing in this pam-"phlet but what has the authority "of, at leaſt, 50 repetitions": yet he cannot ſubſcribe to his opinion; for ſuppoſing it true, it is a ſure ſign that affairs are well conducted; but if the contempt of all men of ſenſe be added to this clamour, oh! then we pronounce him an angel.

He goes on to quote another paſſage; "That the Peace of Utrecht left "us on good terms with Spain, which "might have turn'd to our advan-"tage, had our affairs been wiſely ma-"nag'd in the late reign; but as they "were not, it laid the foundation of "the ſeveral perplexities that have "ſince attended us."

This conduct of the laſt reign, Fog ſays, ought to be apply'd to a perſon or two ſince dead, and not to the preſent miniſters. Adds, that he might have ſpar'd his encomium of the Utrecht treaty, or ſhewn us the folly of cultivating a good underſtanding with the Emperor and Spain at the ſame time, by which our affairs, every where were left in a ſtupid calm; for had they contriv'd to make either of 'em our enemy, we ſhould always have had a quarrel and a treaty depending, and ſo have given vent to our humours and money too.

The author having ſaid, that when the preſent miniſtry came into power, they obſerv'd from the complexion of things miſchief muſt be gath'ring ſome where, which prov'd to be an alliance betwixt Spain and the Emperor. This, Fog affirms, was very ſagacious; but that the treaty he ſpeaks of was, and ſtill is deny'd by both the parties.

He then criticiſes on ſeveral other parts of the diſcourſe, eſpecially on thoſe which extol the conduct of our miniſtry and their management of our affairs, relating to the inaction of the ſquadron ſent to the Weſt Indies, and keeping back the Spaniſh Treaſure, thereby rendring it uſeleſs, as to any dangerous purpoſes.

The wiſdom of this conduct, Fog takes notice, proved itſelf in the Event; The Spaniards were provoked; ſent out their privateers, and pillag'd our merchants!

As to humouring the Q. of Spain in ſettling the Italian dukedoms on Don Carlos, ſays, ſneeringly, beſides obliging a fair Lady, Great Britain has gain'd the treaty of Seville!

Fog's Journal, Jan. 30. No. 124.

THE Preſs, ſays he, has lately ſwarm'd with writing pro and con, upon the preſent poſture of affairs, by which we find that one party is of opinion, that miniſters of ſtate are no more than men; t'other will have 'em to be angels (that is while they continue in power.) —— Here you read, that Affairs are in no better ſituation than they ſhould be —— there, that we have neither paſt miſcarriages, or preſent grievances to complain of, and that the nation never was in ſo flouriſhing a condition. One D'Anvers, and, if I miſtake not, one Fog, are accuſed of ſeditiouſly aſſerting that a Crow is black, but the writers on the other ſide, have, with infinite Wit, proved a black Crow to be the whiteſt bird of all the feather'd kind.

He proceeds thus merrily to remark on a pamphlet intitled, Conſiderations on the preſent ſtate of affairs, with regard to the Number of Forces in the Pay of Great Britain; and endeavours, in his ironical way, to overthrow the ſeveral arguments advanced by the author for maintaining the Heſſian troops, and concludes with giving his opinion that they will be very far from convincing the diſaffected.

The Grub-ſtreet Journal, Thurſday, Jan. 14. No. 53.

DR. Quibus chuſes for the ſubject of his diſcourſe the operation deſigned to be performed on the ears of one Rey, a condemn'd malefactor, by Mr Cheſelden. This he treats in a ludicrous manner, and ſuppoſes that if Mr Rey ſhould prove ſo unphiloſophical as to give the ſurgeon the ſlip as ſoon as the operation is over, we ſhould be as much in the dark as we were before. He declares his opinion, that not only the drum, but the whole organ, or the ear it ſelf, is of no uſe at all in hearing, and would know the truth of his conjecture by ſeeing the ears of ſome malefactor entirely extirpated. Recommends it as a thing of great uſe, if inſtead of executing malefactors they were made to undergo ſuch kind of experiments. Trial may be made whether the Retina of the eye is of any uſe in ſeeing. A needle might be introduced into the eye, and the Retina quite remov'd. The ſpleen might be taken out of ſome vile malefactor, and an obſervation made whether their inclinations to evil courſes depend not on a ſuperfluity of the Atra Bilis. Another experiment he recommends as of great conſequence, that is, whether the tying up one of the teſticles would not determine the ſex of a child begotten at ſuch a time. By this means, he ſays, many illuſtrious families might be inform'd of a juſt and certain method of obtaining an heir to their eſtates. See p. 19.

The Grub-ſtreet Journal, Thurſday, Jan. 14. No. 54.

THE author begins with the Laureat's new-year's ode (for which ſee p. 20.) and ſubjoins to it ſome explanatory notes; the ſubſtance of which is contain'd in the following ſhort remarks.

Line 1. The eternity of the world is here maintain'd, tho' Dr. Clarke had objected againſt it.

3. Old Janus, a heatheniſh emblem, is ſupplanted by old Time, as more familiar to chriſtian readers.

5. To this is objected, making ſpring a living perſon calling for birth as it were were to old Time; whereas old Time had bid ſpring paſs, ſo no occaſion for ſpring to call. Which is defended thus; When time bids ſpring paſs, it might not be ready, but as ſoon as it was, it calls for birth.

Line 7. Harveſt in ſummer is very early, and ſomething unuſual.

9. But not ſoon enough, it ſeems, becauſe here each ſeaſon is ſaid to bring THEIR ſtores TO winter's wants, till warmer genial ſuns recall the ſpring—— However Mr. Cibber's authority makes it current.

15. An admirable improvement of Nocte pluit tota, &c. which to ſet in a true light is tranſlated and imitated:

It rains all night, the ſhows returns with day:
Thus Jove and Cæſar bear divided ſway.

Plenty is Heav'n's, and Peace our Monarch's care,
Thus Jove and George divided Empire ſhare.

But to this was objected, that we are not only indebted to heaven for plenty, but for peace too, tho' like marriages ſaid to be made there, it was not yet come down.

21. It is queried what war and peace the poet means here.

22. An emendation of this line is offer'd to make it clear,
We triumph moſt when MOST the farmer feeds.
and the Beef eaters at St. James's, are appeal'd to for the juſtneſs of it.

23, 24. The elegance of theſe lines are literally defended, but the propriety and cadence of them are called in queſtion.

25, 26, 27, 21. Theſe ſeem inconſiſtent with the 19th and 20th verſes.

As in the 35th, and 46th lines, Phœbus had roll'd in vain, till Albion could behold ſuch a ſight as at preſent on the throne, well might the poet make the exclamation in the 37th and 38th.

39, 40. As it is impoſſible always to REACH our own deſires, tho' requir'd by heaven, it is propoſed to alter it to TEACH; that is, inſtruct united hearts to addreſs the throne by their own loyal deſires.

41. Read ſelfiſh, as better than ſelf-born; all views whatever being ſuch.

46. Suns probably ſhould be read ſons, becauſe it ſeems to be a contradiction to ever circling ſun, line 1.

The criticiſer concludes with obſerving, that when a ſong is good ſenſe, it muſt be made nonſenſe before it is made muſick; ſo when a ſong is nonſenſe, there's no other way but by ſinging it to make it ſeem tolerable ſenſe.

Grub-ſtreet Journal, Jan. 21. No. 55.

THE author begins with obſerving that nothing has increaſed their ſociety ſo much as poetry: We are taught it at ſchool; if not, believe we are born poets. Every corner abounds with its profeſſors; the bellman nightly ſalutes his maſter and miſtreſs: the marſhal, his gentlemen ſoldiers every chriſtmas: every ſtreet rings with ballads; the royal palace reſounds with odes; and every church-yard with its productions: Stephen Duck's good fortune has occaſion'd a poor Weaver in Spittle-fields to publiſh a miſcellany of poems which he addreſſes to the Queen, and introduces with this line.

Thy fortune, Duck, affects my kindred mind;

Wherefore Grub ſt. preſumes to repreſent to her Majeſty, that the beſt way to encourage the Weaver, would be to wear britiſh manufactures; and the threſher, by giving him a ſmall farm in the country; and to reſtrain both from writing a line more in rhime or meaſure.

Apprehends, that from this general inclination to write, they ſhall be oblig'd, like the royal ſociety, to diſcourage intruders amongſt them, and, to prevent miſunderſtanding, propoſes that no perſon ſhall be a mem-member of both societies at the same time.

Grub-street Journal, Jan. 21. No. 56.

MAkes some remarks concerning the management of controversies between the political writers. This he illustrates by two examples; by which he would intimate the spirit that animates and governs both parties. The first is a quotation of two severe personal characters, from a pamphlet entitled Sedition and Defamation display'd, in a Letter to the Author of the Craftsman. The other is some paragraphs attacking two characters on the opposite side, drawn from the Pamphlet call'd, A proper reply to a late scurrilous libel intitled Sedition and Defamation display'd; in a Letter to the author, by Caleb D'anvers Esq; which four characters he supposes imaginary, for if they were real, no man of sense, honour, or honesty would espouse them.

Weekly Register, Jan. 9. No. 39.

THE Register publishes a mystical letter from a club of Gardners, wherein is figuratively describ'd the evils which the fraternity have occasionally suffer'd from the depredations of Locusts, Palmer-worms, Caterpillars, and other pestiferous vermin. Several discourses were made by the members concerning the Origin and Progress of these their common enemies. One of the company said, that the first appearance of them is in a sort of spawn, spread over the cabbage-leaves, which gradually rises into Grubs. This Grub-bean race, he reckons, are descendants of the Egyptian Locusts, and the Palmer-worms and Caterpillars, a spurious offspring of the Locusts. Another of the society believes they are of an English extraction; gives several significations of the word Grub, and then runs a parallel between the insects called Grubs, and the Grubean Society, or Grubstreet Journalists. To which he adds a remark, that 'tis something strange a body of Men should set themselves up to make a merit of other men's faults: they must of course be despicable themselves, because they take a pleasure in making others appear so.

Remembers that in the late war-time many postscripts to the Flying-Posts were bawl'd about with abundance of news, but scarce a word of truth: So that paper gain'd the name of the Lying Post, and was called Grub-street News. And still it's a common appellation, when we hear full and true accounts cry'd by our doors, 'tis Grubstreet, all Grubstreet.

Weekly Register, Jan. 16. No. 40. On Ridicule, address'd to the authors of the Grubstreet-Journal.

SAys, Ridicule is a general practice, and proceeds either from the wantonness of our own vanity, or contempt of others frailties. We take the same pleasure in scandal as monkies do in mischief. Wonders why the Tea-table should be thought the mother of scandal, or the nurse of ridicule, when all mankind is pursuing the same pleasure under different disguises. They condemn Censure in others, that they may indulge it themselves. The taverns are as accessary to it as private houses. Courts are esteemed the source of politeness and good manners; theatres of ingenuity, churches of sanctity; yet all are infected with the evil of scandal. Seems to prefer the gaming-table as freest from irony and slander; avarice being a spirit that allows of no rival. This vice is contagious, and runs thro' the whole people: it wanders every where, like an ignis fatuus, and is only at home in the Grubstreet-Journal.

Don't pretend how far this libertinism of speech is allowable, but is certain that every moral man will use it only for the sake of him he censures; and every gentleman will make good manners the only rule of behaviour. All men are jealous of their characters, and we must have a due complaisance for one frailty while we would reform another; for the the inſolence of knowledge is as inſupportable as the affectation of folly. The ſubjects of ridicule are to be juſtly choſen and carefully diſtinguiſhed.

Concludes with ſome Reflections on the authors of the Grubſtreet-Journal, who have undertaken the drudgery of invective under pretence of being champions for politeneſs.

Weekly Regiſter, Jan. 34. No. 41.

HE remarks, that from an ambition of emulating, without a capacity to equal another's excellencies, have ariſen an infinite number of pretenders to reputation. The regular phyſician is intruded upon by the empyrick; the maſterly painter is ſlighted in favour of impudence and ignorance; the moſt elegant and chaſte compoſitions of muſick, are forc'd to give way to amuſements leſs polite: Quackery interferes with trade, and undermines honeſty. The pedlar ſtiles himſelf a merchant; No wonder then that authors of every character are ſo wretchedly perſonated. Exclaims againſt bad writers, from the Court-ſcribbler to the Grubſtreet hackney.

Proceeds to the deſcription of a good author; ſays, his principal end, in occaſional writings, ſhould be to entertain the publick innocently and genteely; to inſinuate knowledge in the diſguiſe of amuſement, and trifle the world into virtue and good manners: he ſhould conſider every reader as a critick and a gentleman, and be fearful of offending either: points out what a writer ſhould obſerve, who would recommend himſelf and entertain the world; i. e. an important ſubject, a clear and expreſſive method, a flowing and natural ſtile, imagination and judgment, truth and impartiality, modeſty in his images, pity for the failings of human nature, and endeavours to amend 'em. He ſhou'd think himſelf a ſon of the publick and be an example of the generous ſpirit he would recommend; he ſhould be able to trace the paſſions thro' all their diſguiſes; have knowledge in his head, and good humour in his heart: he ſhould be an enemy to vice, but a friend to all mankind.

Weekly Regiſter, Jan. 30. No. 42.

THIS is a continuation of a former diſcourſe upon criticiſm, wherein he points out ſeveral excellencies that diſtinguiſh a good critick from a bad.

He then conſiders the manner of criticiſm, that ſome are Fox-hunters in cenſure, and declare war againſt all writers in general. Some are like Fig and Sutton, the declar'd antagoniſts to one another. Some are Whigs and Tories, divided into parties, always applauding themſelves, and condemning their oppoſers. Some are Grubſtreet hawkers, who make a penny of throwing about cenſure at random without diſtinction or regard of perſons.

The deſign of criticiſm is amendment; and concludes with acknowledging his own failings, and his readineſs to be handſomely corrected.

The Univerſal Spectator, Saturday Jan. 2. No. 117.

Great wits to madneſs nearly are ally'd
And thin partitions do their bounds divide.
Dryden.

MR. Stonecaſtle, the nominal author, begins this day's entertainment with obſerving that men are not born for themſelves; that we are not only bound to relieve the neceſſities of others, but in all our dealings, &c. with mankind to render ourſelves grateful to all, offenſive to none, much leſs take pleaſure in doing diſagreeable things. Says there is a ſett of people who are frequently committing ill-bred, rude, and even ſhocking things, which they excuſe by only ſaying, 'tis their humour. Inſtances in a certain knight, who never ſpoke himſelf, nor ſuffer'd any body in his preſence to ſpeak louder than than to be barely heard; insomuch that his servants, as they were accustom'd to be mutes at home, behav'd like no body when they came abroad.

His nephew Silvio, just come from the university, declaims on every subject you can mention, and imagines himself master of every science. Whatever is the topick of discourse, he will suffer no body to talk upon it but himself; his uncle has but one hope of curing him of his folly, that is, by engaging him to talk of maritime affairs before captain Firebal of the Tempest, who, very probably, will beat him into better manners.

Beauty itself loses its attraction when accompanied with these humours.

Artemisa is exquisitely handsome, but takes the liberty of abusing every body at random, by asking ill-natur'd questions, and being witty upon others imperfections: excuses herself by saying, 'tis her way to tell unlucky truths and she can't help it.

Crito is a man of sense, learning, and accuracy of judgment; but this ought not to privilege him to treat every writer he does not like with opprobrious language.

Belliza has wit and beauty, accompanied with a solid judgment. Yet all this will hardly palliate the disgust she gives people with whom she eats. She never uses a fork, is begreased up to the knuckles, and by her immoderate taking of snuff, which frequently falling among her sauce, she gives her guests their bellies full before they have half din'd. Concludes with a merry story of a certain Colonel, whose slight it was, when he had drank a glass or two too much, to fire off and play tricks with his pistols. One night the col. having drank too freely order'd, his footman, who was an Irishman newly hired, to bring his pistols. Teague obey'd; the Col. loaded them both, and having lock'd the door commanded his man to hold one of the candles at arm's length, till he snuff'd it with a ball. Prayers and intreaties were in vain, and comply he must, and did, tho' trembling; the Col. perform'd the operation at the first attempt, then laying down his pistols was going to unlock the door. Teague catches up that which was loaded, 'Arra Maishter, says he, but now you 'must take up t'other candle, and let 'me have my shoot too.' The col. call'd him rogue and rascal to no purpose, Teague was now vested with power, and would be obey'd: Accordingly his master extended the candle, but this being the first time of Teague's performing, he not only miss'd, but shot off a button from the breast of the colonel's coat. So narrow an escape had a good effect, and cur'd him of this humour of turning marksman in his drink.

The Universal Spectator, Jan. 9. No. 118.

CONtains two Letters, with the Spectator's answers to them.

The first is from a gentleman, who, about three months since, fell passionately in love with a lady at a ball; gives an account of his courtship, and of the kind reception of his addresses during that time, till of a sudden, without any reason given, or objection made, the lady sent him a peremptory message to desist any further pursuit. Complains that 'tis ungenerous and unjust to keep people so long in suspence, with no design but to gratify female pride and vanity.

To this the Spectator replies, That the lady gave him fair play, and an opportunity of rendring himself agreeable; which when she found he could not, she very civilly, by a third person, desir'd him to desist. However, he says, 'tis but reasonable that the lady should give him a certificate of his good behaviour during his courtship.

The second letter is from a young lady of 15, who signs herself Carolina, which which may be ſumm'd up and comprized in thoſe two queries.

1. May a Woman entertain ſeveral lovers at the ſame time?

2. After a Woman has once receiv'd a man's addreſſes, may ſhe with honour turn him off?

To the firſt he anſwers, That ſuch a licence might be granted, if nothing was deſign'd by it but the chuſing of the moſt deſerving for a husband; but conſidering the inconveniences that would neceſſarily attend ſuch an indulgence, he durſt not allow it.

The ſecond query he grants in the affirmative; that is, if ſhe diſcovers him falſe and baſe, or uncapable of making her happy.

Univerſal Spectator, January, 16. No. 119.

CONtains a letter from a phyſician, in which he deſcribes the miſerable condition of his patients, that apply to him on the venereal account. Of this ſort the moſt unfortunate and pitiful object is a woman of the town, who, if not quite abandon'd, gives a looſe to her paſſion on ſuch occaſions. The conſideration of her paſt, preſent, and future ſtate, fills her with diſtraction, and involves her in endleſs evils, from which death only can deliver her.

Proceeds to argue with the infamous authors of the miſery of theſe wretches, who firſt ſeduce the poor young creatures from their innocence, and then triumph in their wickedneſs. He who debauches a maiden, and then expoſes her to want and ſhame, is arrived to ſuch a monſtrous height of villany, that no word in our language can reach it. Mentions a further ſpecies of cruelty, that is, the neceſſity ſome of theſe poor wretches are under, if with child, of applying to a magiſtrate to procure ſome pitiful maintenance for her unfortunate babe.------ When all that is to be done by the father, is to make the beſt bargain he can with the church-wardens to take it off his hands; which is commonly done for a treat, and 10 or 12*l.* So the child is placed upon the pariſh, and the woman upon the town.

Univerſ. Spectator, Jan. 23. No. 120.

ENtertains his readers with two letters; the firſt is from Triſtitia Stale, who complains that ſhe is continually perſecuted, merely becauſe ſhe is an old maid.

Virginity, ſhe ſays, has not always been a reproach, ſees no encouragement in matrimony, and begs the Spectator to reprimand the malaperts, who ridicule chaſtity; adds, that a ſingle life in woman was eſteem'd among the ancient as well as modern Romans; veſtals then, and nuns now.

The other letter is from Charlotte Wilful, a young lady of 19, who ſays ſhe has two admirers. The firſt is 'ſquire Scrape, who has 1200*l. per annum*, which he keeps in his own hands and farms himſelf, and therefore is favour'd in his pretentions by her father.

Mr Myrtle, her mother's favourite, is the other, who, by his own account is near 40, by that of his acquaintance 10 years older, has ſquander'd away a good eſtate, but by the death of an uncle is now worth 1000*l. per annum*, and is a perfect humouriſt.

But to both theſe ſhe prefers Mr Plume of the Inner-Temple, who has no eſtate, but is of a ſweet temper. Concludes with deſiring Mr Stonecaſtle to declaim on parents making choices for their Children, with a ſtroke on antiquated beaus, and rural animals, and to recommend a fine gentleman with no fortune. Deſires, by way of poſtſcript, that he would not delay publiſhing her letter, becauſe Mr Plume and ſhe had agreed to run away together on Tueſday next.

The Univerſal Spectator, Jan. 30. No. 121.

AMong all thoſe amuſements people find to paſs away the time, Poeſy and Muſick are the moſt elegantly entertaining.

tertaining. By the ancients they were look'd upon as immediately inſpired from above, and the profeſſors reverenc'd as ſacred, and the favourites of heaven.

He adds, that we excel the ancients in muſick, if not in poetry, and prefers a good Engliſh ſong, tho' ſet to a common tune, before the Italian trifling unnatural compoſitions. The one raviſhes the ear only, the other entertains the underſtanding alſo.--- Hence he takes occaſion to recommend A collection of Lyric poems and ſongs, with muſick annexed, lately publiſh'd.

Free Briton, Jan. 7. No. 58.

THE author refutes a falſity advanced by Mr D'anvers in the Craftſman of the 13th of Dec. wherein, ſpeaking of the riot-act, he ſays, "That an election of Church-wardens hath been already made a handle for putting this law in execution. That the maſter of a ſmall veſſel was kept a whole year in priſon, to the loſs of his voyage, and almoſt the ruin of his family, upon happening to go thro' the church-yard, from viſiting a friend, an hour after the proclamation was read. Nay, that the poor man might have run the hazard of his life, as well as have been put to further expences, if his late Majeſty had not been graciouſly pleas'd to grant him a Noli proſequi.

The falſehood of this ſtory the Free Briton thus corrects.--- The gentlemen of Greenwich diſagreeing upon the choice of a church-warden at Eaſter 1722, a poll was demanded and a ſcrutiny afterwards agreed on. The ſcrutineers met, but a number of diſſolute perſons tumultuouſly aſſembling at the ſame time, inſulted the juſtices in a rude and outragious manner, (juſtice Savory receiving a blow on the back by a great ſtone) ſo that it was thought proper to read the proclamation in order to diſperſe them. Among the rioters was Charles Curtis, maſter of a ſmall veſſel. He was with them before, at, and after the proclamation was read, and very notorious by his behaviour; was ſeveral times admoniſhed by the juſtices to depart; and as often very civilly acquainted by them with the ill conſequence of his continuance in that riotous aſſembly. But notwithſtanding their repeated admonitions, he ſtill continued, and was found among the riotersan hour and a half after the Proclamation was read, and being even then adviſed to leave that place, and to avoid the fatal conſequence, the ſaid Curtis, ſtill refuſed to depart, and inſiſted with uncommon inſolence, that he was as much about his buſineſs in that place as the juſtices themſelves. Whereupon he was apprehended, committed to Maidſtone Goal, try'd, and convicted, but in compaſſion to his family his puniſhment was ſuſpended; but a Noli proſequi was never granted.

The aim of the Free Briton, in this paper, is to ſhew the inconcluſive reaſoning of the Craftſman from matters of fact falſely aſſerted.

Free Briton, Jan. 14. No. 59.

IN the concluſion of this paper is a letter by way of reply to the Craftſman, Jan. 9. wherein that author calls upon the Free Briton to juſtify the adminiſtration for breaking with the Emperor. To which the Free Briton anſwers, that it will be full time to make a defence when ſuch meaſures are undertaken; that their inſolence is aſtoniſhing, in imputing the ſame crimes to our miniſters for which themſelves have deſerved a halter. Asks the Craftſman whether he imagines the miniſtry are ſo fond of the Emperor on the ſudden, as to ſacrifice the trade of Spain, and abandon all the powers of Europe, only to run into his arms?

In Feb. laſt an outcry was rais'd on a pre-a pretended diſcovery that the miniſtry were making up at Vienna by an implicit guarantee of the Emperor's ſucceſſion to the Auſtrian Netherlands, as he ſhould ſettle it; yet this could not be obtain'd of the Britiſh councils; and now we are told we are ready to lurch all our allies for his ſake.

The authors of the Craftſman allow that this Treaty-breaking meaſure would be right, provided a certain great man was removed. As if national compacts could be diſſolv'd by the change of the miniſter: The nation muſt anſwer for the faith of treaties. Grants that ſuch a conduct might be expected, ſhould this miniſtry be chang'd.

It does not redound to the ſhame of thoſe who made the treaty of Seville, that the parties have allow'd the Emperor a reaſonable time to come into their meaſures; which if they had not, they would have been charg'd with raſhneſs, precipitation, and every enormity. Concludes with mentioning ſeveral injuries and inſults that this nation has ſuffer'd from the Imperial quarter.

Free Briton, Jan. 21.

HE applies Job's ſaying to his friends, Will you lye for God? to the Craftſman, Will you lye for liberty and country? and aſks, if he demands impunity for defamatory falſehood?

Breach of faith, which the Craftſman had laid to the charge of the miniſtry, is the moſt virulent aſperſion that a libeller can utter againſt any government, is therefore puniſhable, and declares his opinion, that ſpreading falſe news is no part of the freedom of the preſs.

He thinks no honeſt cauſe wants the aſſiſtance of falſhood, ſo no man ſhould lay claim to liberty who adheres not to truth; therefore the Craftſman ought not to complain of ſeverity from the government, unleſs he will evince the truth of his aſſertion.

Men think that proſecutions and confinement are very hard, nor conſidering the provocations that urg'd them; and that the worſt imputations are charg'd on the councils of the crown, without the leaſt colour of truth. The puniſhment inflicted on a libelling printer, bears no proportion with the wrongs thus offer'd to a great people.

Diſtinguiſhes between opinions offer'd upon national affairs, and miſrepreſentations of thoſe affairs. The firſt is not criminal, the other may. Says, theſe men may be puniſhed on the Statute, as ſpreaders of falſe news.

The Craftſman can defend him ſelf no other way then by refuting the charge of falſhood.

The Craftſman had ſuggeſted that the Government abetted the very practices for which he is under proſecution; and inſtanced in the pamphlet Sedition and Defamation diſplay'd, which repreſents the conduct and characters of two perſons who have laboured theſe five years to make this miniſtry odious, for which reaſons the oppoſite writers ſpare no invectives to point out theſe gentlemen Weekly, as Traitors and Villains. The Free-Briton here juſtifies the characters complain'd of.

Free Briton, Jan. 28. No. 61.

HE takes notice that the Craftſman in his reply to the pamphlet called Sedition and Defamation diſplay'd, has not once attempted to ſhow that the characters of two gentlemen there given are in the leaſt unlike or injurious, and maintains that whatever is ſaid of them in that pamphlet is indiſputably true; yet obſerves, that the author admitted, that he who had wronged his friendſhip, and betrayed his confidence, came into the world with all the advantages that recommend men to the eſteem, favour, and approbation of mankind.

The Craftsman on the contrary diveſts the miniſter whoſe character he draws of all thoſe talents and abilities, without which, power is not eaſily acquir'd or long maintain'd. See p. 4.

But the miniſter's abilities have been the dread and diſappointment of his enemies, and have carried him thro' innumerable difficulties for five years together, and enabled him to baffle all their attempts againſt him; notwithſtanding he is deſcrib'd as ſetting out in mean circumſtances, and recommended to mankind by every bad quality, yet thoſe who object this now, were more than ten years his aſſociates in private life as well as publick affairs. As to what has been ſaid of his being ſuperior in impudence to all, this author replies, that 'twas never heard that he call'd gentlemen ſcoundrels in publick aſſemblies; reviled the Speeches from the Throne; or, that if affairs were managed as he dictated, he would maintain his Majeſty's adminiſtration.

Several other ſcurrilous reflections, thrown out againſt this honourable perſon, are anſwer'd at large in this paper, and ſome of them charged with notorious falſhood.

The British Journal: or, The Traveller, Jan. 9.

THE author mentions two evils which attend thoſe that trade with pawnbrokers; the firſt is, perſons who have left pledges in their hands, upon offering to redeem them, have been obliged to advance five or ſix ſhillings more then they borrow'd on them. The other is the power of the pawnbroker to defraud his cuſtomer entirely of his pledge; both which may be redreſs'd by obliging pawnbrokers to give a receipt to every perſon borrowing money on pledges, to which both borrower and lender ſhall ſubſcribe their names, and each of them take a copy.

In ſome conſiderations on the ſtage, opera's, and the force of muſick, he ſays, that an opera ought to be as regularly conducted, and the characters as juſtly maintain'd; the ſame end propos'd, and as large room for the exerciſe of a fine genius, as in tragedy or comedy. That a compleat opera ſet to muſick would have an advantage over tragedy. Is not pleaſed with the Recitativo of an opera, becauſe 'tis the muſick of the ſongs only that dwell on the memory.

Diſtinguiſhes between the grand-opera and thoſe ballad-opera's now in vogue, which latter, if well ſet to muſick, might deſerve applauſe.

Commends Addiſon's Roſamond as a beautifull piece of poetry, both in fable and language. In it is maintain'd the dignity of tragedy, the humour of comedy, and the principal end of opera's; i. e. the encouragement of virtue, diſcouraging vice, and probability through the whole is preſerv'd.

The British Journal, Jan. 23.

RELATES the hiſtory of two traytors, Edric the father, and Edric the ſon, who lived near 800 years ago; from which he collects and concludes with this leſſon to princes, that they ought to be cautious whom they truſt, and to pry with piercing eyes into the conduct of their miniſters, and the motives of their counſels.

An Extract of a Diſcourſe made to the Royal Society, in Defence of Mr. Cheſelden's intended Operation on the Ear of a condemn'd Malefactor.

Daily Courant. Jan. 17.

THE author firſt obſerves, that the ſkin, commonly call'd, The Drum of the Ear, is not the organ of hearing, as was vulgarly thought; for the proof of which he offers a great number of reaſons and obſervations of his own, as well as the opinions and reaſons of the moſt learned learned and judicious anatomiſts. He then obſerves, there are two paſſages to the organs of hearing; one by the outward ear, the other thro' the back part of the mouth, thro' which ſome people can hear, who cannot hear thro' the outward ear. In this caſe he ſuppoſes the ſound may be interrupted by the drum of the ear, which is ſeated in this paſſage, and being diſeaſed, may hinder ſounds from paſſing to the internal parts, where are ſeated the proper organs of hearing: In this caſe only, he ſuppoſes, that perforating the drum may prove a remedy for deafneſs, as depreſſing the chryſtalline humour of the eye (vulgarly call'd couching a cataract) is daily found to be a remedy for blindneſs; and yet that operation has been as indecently and ignorantly ridicul'd as the experiment of Mr. Cheſelden's; one writer againſt that operation not ſcrupling to give his book the following title, A new method of recovering the ſight by putting out the eye. He alſo obſerves, that the ſcituation of the drum is ſuch, that the operation may be eaſily made by a skilful perſon; and it being a very thin skin, he preſumes it will not be very painful; and if ſo, the perſon who is to undergo the experiment will purchaſe his life upon very eaſy terms: But ſuppoſing it ſhould be very painful; (which 'tis hop'd it will not be) on whom can the firſt experiment be ſo fitly made, for the ſervice of mankind, as on one whoſe life is already forfeited to the publick?

Read's Weekly Journal, Jan. 16.

ENtertains his readers with a letter from a correſpondent concerning the preſent ſtate of the Law; takes notice of the ſpleen which in general appears againſt lawyers and law; ſays, that the multiplicity of ſtatutes is one of the greateſt grievances of this kingdom. Quotes an opinion of a learned judge, that the beſt way to reform the law, was to abrogate all the acts made for its amendment. Aſſerts, that the founding a proper Corpus Juris, is the higheſt point of policy in a well order'd ſtate. The old Engliſh method of proceeding againſt debtors, being judg'd inconvenient, produced the act on which was found d the Capias in detinue, as the ſhorteſt way of recovery. Complains of fictitious ſuits, particularly in ejectments. He reſents likewiſe the encouragement given in every court to the multitude of ſuitors, as contrary to the very end of juſtice. Propoſes ſome remedies for theſe evils, by an act empowering commiſſioners to inſpect into

1. The condition of the law in general, common and ſtatute; what of them may be repealed, and what not.

2. To frame proper inſtructions to direct thoſe who are intruſted with the execution of the law.

3. To examine into the nature of actions on the caſe, which by judge Dodderidge is declared to be a feigned action contrived in deceit of the law.

4. To contrive how to prevent vexatious and litigious ſuits, by leſſening the credit of parole agreement.

5. That every practiſer of the law be obliged by oath to give his opinion juſtly to the beſt of his knowledge, to practiſe fairly, and by no indirect means procure falſe judgment in any caſe.

Laſtly, To compile a compleat body of the law, with an inſtitute of maxims and rules, a treatiſe of practice, and the forms to be obſerved by courts.

Recitative.

ONce more the ever circling Sun
Thro' the cœlestial signs has run,
Again old Time invites his Lays,
And bids the annual Song rise:
The youthful Spring shall call for birds,
And glad with hopping flow'rs the Earth:
Fair Summer lead with Sheaves the Field,
And golden fruit shall Autumn yield;
Each to the Winter's want their store shall bring,
'Till warmer genial Suns recall the Spring.

Air.

Ye grateful Britons bless the Year,
That kindly yields increase,
While plenty that might feed a War,
Enjoys the guard of peace,
Your plenty to the Skies you owe,
Peace is your Monarch's care;
Thus bounteous Jove and George below
Divided empire share.

Recitative.

Britannia pleas'd, looks round her realms to see
Your various marks of Felicity!
(To glorious War, a glorious peace succeeds;
For most we triumph when the Farmer feeds)
Then truly are we great when truth supplies
Our Blood, our Treasures drain'd by victories,
Turn happy Britain, to the throne your Eyes,
And in the royal offspring see,
How amply bounteous providence supplies
The source of your Felicity.

Air.

Behold in ev'ry Face imperial Graces shine
All native to the Race of George and Caroline:
In each young Hero we admire
The blooming virtue of his Sire;
In each maturing Fair we find,
Maternal charms of softer kind.

Recitative.

In vain thro' ages past has Phabus roll'd,
E're such a flight bless Albion could behold.
Thrice happy Mortals, if your state you knew,
Where can the Globe so bless a nation shew?
All that of you indulgent Heav'n requires,
Is loyal Hearts, to reach your own Desires.
Let Faction then her self born views lay down,
And Hearts united, thus address the Throne.

Air.

Hail! Royal Cæsar, hail!
Like this may ev'ry annual Sun
Add brighter Glories to thy Crown,
'Till Suns themselves shall fail.

Recitative.

May Heav'n thy peaceful Reign prolong,
Nor let to thy great Empires wrong,
Foreign or native Foes prevail.
Until, &c.

ODE humbly inscribed to the Poet Laureat, taken from Lon. Evening Post Jan. 7. as there said by Step. Duck, Esq.

Semel in anno videt Apollo.

Recitative.

ACcept, O Cibber, the wish'd-for lay,
Which, to your honour, dares both sing and say:
To you great Prince of Comedy and Song,
The Tributes of inferior Pens belong;
You, who by royal favour wear the Bays,
And grateful eternize our Monarch's praise,

Air.

Let us sing to the King,
All about the circling Year:
Sing a floreat to the laurea,
Ev'ry Season brings good cheer;
Grateful Britons, thank the bards,
Who by verse does plenty guards
Such as hungry War does need,
War, that does on plenty feed.

Recitative.

Phœbus with joy looks Britain round to see,
The happy state of his lov'd Poetry;
To Eusden, Cibber gloriously succeeds;
With triumphs most, when bard like farmer feeds:
Then truly are we great, when he can shew
The way his own sun-dogs to sow do.
Cast, envious Poets, on his Verse your Eyes,
Behold the offspring of his brain,
How his rich Genius constantly supplies
The source of his poetick vein!

Air.

Thro'out the whole what matchless Graces shine,
Paraphonalia sparkles in each Line;
Native to Cibber, we admire
The style and fancy, wit and fire;
In each maturing Word we find
Something soft for thought design'd.

Recitative.

Complain not Sol, of fruitless ages past,
Think your self bless in such a Son as last:
Thrice happy Poets, if you knew your state;
Britain alone can boast a Laureat.
For if, like him, to Grandeur you aspire,
By his Example reach your own desire.
Let cricks then their self born views lay down,
And Bards in chorus thus sing round the town.

Air.

Hail! Matchless Colley, hail!
Like this may ev'ry New Year's Day
Add fresher Honour to the Bay,
'Till Bay itself shall fail.

Recitative.

May Heaven preserve thy Genius clear,
For Christmas comes but once a Year,
Give the Poet then some Ale.
As, &c.

An Ode on Twelfth-Day. In Imitation of an Ode on New Year's-Day.

Paſt Two o'Clock, and a froſty Morning.

Recitative.

ONce more the Bell-man bids us wake,
With Prophecy of Ale and Cake;
Tells us before we ſleep again,
Tom ſhall be King, and Nanny Queen,
While good Sir Knight a Knave appears,
And Madam the Slut's Enſign wears.
Such Kings and Queens ſhould Colly ſing,
Such Worthies in his numberleſs ſong
While both the Britiſh Oil and Bore on Shores,
To form the Cake, unite their grateful Stores.

Air.

Ye grateful Footmen, bleſs the Days,
That ſuch Preferments gives;
Ye joyful Cook-maids drink away,
While ye your Title lives.
Good Ale you to the Brewer owe,
The Cake's the Baker's care;
And all above, and deke below,
Combine to give good fare.

Recitative.

Tom thinks himſelf a real Monarch grown,
And, pleas'd looks round the Kitchen as his own.
While Nanny with him royal Honour ſhares,
And on the other Maids majeſtick ſtares,
The New King's health is firſt, the Queen's ſucceed:
And moſt he triumph's, who moſt freely feeds.
Then all are truly great when Ale ſupplies
The want of Riches and of Dignities,
And the exhauſted Jugg gives victories.
Turn happy Will, Jack, Kate, and Doll, your eyes
On yon Two Chairs, and there obſerve
How well the new-rais'd, grace the place ſupplies
Which both, as you muſt own, deſerve.

Air.

Behold in each pleas'd face what lovely graces ſhine,
How on their little realm they look with air benign.
Such, Will, muſt you and Kate appear,
If Fortune the enſuing Year,
Convinces us ſhe is not blind,
By proving to your merit kind.

Recitative.

In vain above Three Hundred Days have paſs'd
Between this joyful Twelfth Day and the laſt;
No Scene like this has chear'd your Hearts and Eyes,
Where ſhall we find ſuch bliſs beneath the Skies?
All that Sir William and my Lady aſk,
Is, that when all have well perform'd their Task,
With ſilent pace, without your Shoes you'll tread
And each go peaceably, tho' drunk to bed.

Air.

Hail! merry Monarch, hail!
Like this may ev'ry annual Cake
You merrier ſtill and merrier make,
'Till Cakes themſelves ſhall fail.

Recitative.

May you all long your Places keep;
May no makebate amongſt you creep,
With Peace deſtroying Tale.

A HYMN to the LAUREAT,

Introduced in the Whitehall and London Evening Poſts, Jan. 9. thus

Sir, By giving a Place in your Paper to the following Unfaſhionable Hymn you will very much oblige Sir, your Humble Servt.

CIBBER, accept theſe feeble lays
From an unſkilfull muſe,
Who tries with artleſs Note, to praiſe
What envious men abuſe.

Nature and Art in thee combine;
Thy Comedies excell:
With Wit and Senſe replete, they ſhine,
And read politely well.

Who ſees th'inconſtant Loveleſs* range,
But mourns Amanda's fate?
Each female Heart approves his change,
And pants for ſuch a ſtate.

When Lady Betty † treads the ſtage,
All modiſh prudes ſubmit:
What Foppington adorns our age,
With the ſame Grace and Wit?

In Townley ‡ ſee the modern Wife!
How full of Vice! how blam'd!
How ruin'd by the modern Life!
How valu'd, when reclaim'd!

May empty Journals weekly rail;
May all dull bards repine:
If Wit unequall'd ſhou'd prevail,
The Laurel's juſtly thine.

To

To the Author of the Whitehall Evening Poſt.

SIR, Jan. 12.

As you are an impartial Writer, I dare ſay you will do juſtice on both ſides.

The Verſes on the Laureat, in yours of Saturday laſt, have occaſion'd the following reply; which I hope you will give a Place to in your next, to ſhew that we can be quick as well as ſmart, upon a proper occaſion. And as I think it the loweſt mark of a ſcoundrel to make bold with any man's character in print, without ſubſcribing the true name of the author; I therefore deſire, if the Laureat is concern'd enough to ask the queſtion, that you will tell him my name, and where I live, till then I beg leave to be known by no other than that of your ſervant,

Francis Fair-play.

AH! hah! Sir Coll. is that thy way,
Thy own dull Praiſe to write?
And would'ſt thou ſtand ſo ſure a lay?
No! that's too ſtale a bite.

Nature and art in thee combine,
Thy Talents here excell:
All ſhining braſs thou doſt outſhine,
To play the cheat ſo well.

Who ſees thee in Iago's part,
But thinks thee ſuch a Rogue?
And is not glad with all his heart,
To hang ſo ſad a Dog?

When Bays thou play'ſt, thy ſelf thou art,
For that by nature fit,
No blockhead better ſuits the part,
Than ſuch a coxcomb wit,

In Wronghead too, thy brains we ſee,
Who might do well at plough;
As fit for Parliament was he,
As for the Laurel thou.

Bring thy protected verſe from Court,
And try it on the Stage;
There it will make much better ſport,
And ſet the town in rage.

There beau's, & wits, & cits, and ſmarts,
Where hiſſing's not uncivil)
Will ſhew their parts to thy deſerts,
And ſend it to the devil.

But, ah! in vain 'gainſt thee we write,
In vain thy verſe we maul;
Our ſharpeſt ſatyr's thy delight,
For * Blood! thou'lt ſtand it all!

Thunder, 'tis ſaid, the Laurel ſpares,
Nought but thy brow could blaſt it,
And yet! O curſt provoking Stars!
Thy comfort it, thou haſt it.

* Epilogue to the Non-juror.

An ODE to Sir Robert Walpole, for New-Year's-Day, 1731.

I.

GUardian of Britannia's glory,
Life and ſoul of Europe's peace,
Greateſt name in modern ſtory,
May thy happy years increaſe!
Brighter ſtill thy genius ſhining,
Richer bleſſings yet deſigning.

II.

Thee, the ſacred muſes hailing,
Dulneſs ſeal'd in ſlumber lies;
Arts and wealth thro' thee prevailing,
Faction far confounded flies;
Happy prince in thee confiding:
Happy people of thy guiding!

III.

Viewing preſent, paſt, and future,
As thou keep'ſt eternal watch,
Janus ſay (for thou are neuter)
Haſt thou ſeen our Walpole's match?
Phœbus in thy radiant journey,
Canſt thou to a greater turn thee?

IV.

Lucky omens, minutes ſmiling,
All the friendly cares appear?
Every diſcontent beguiling,
Crown the Patriot's coming Year:
In his perſon ſtrongly guarded,
Counſels bleſt, and works rewarded.

An Epitaph on Mrs. OLDFIELD.

Hic Juxta requieſcit,
Tot inter poetarum laudata nomina,
ANNA OLDFIELD.
Nec ipſa minore laude digna,
Quippe quæ eorum opera
In ſcenam quories prodivit,
Illuſtravit ſemper, & nobilitavit.
Nunquam ingenium idem ad partes diverſiſſimas
Habilius fuit.
Ita tamen ut ad ſingulas.
Non facta, ſed nata eſſe videretur.
In tragediis
Formæ ſplendor, oris dignitas, inceſſus majeſtas
Tantâ vocis ſuavitate temperabantur.
Ut nemo eſſet tam agreſtis, tam durus ſpectator,
Quin in admirationem totus raperetur.
In comediâ autem
Tanta vis, tam venuſta hilaritas, tam curioſa felicitas
Ut neque ſufficerent ſpectando oculi,
Neque plaudendo manus.

Engliſh'd thus.

Near this place reſts the body of Anne Oldfield, amidſt ſo many celebrated Poets, herſelf not leſs deſerving to be celebrated; for whene'er ſhe trod the ſtage, her actions always illuſtrated and ennobled their compoſitions. Never was one Genius ſo adapted to the moſt different parts; ſhe ſeem'd not made but born for each diſtinctly. In tragedy her noble preſence, elevated ſpeech, and majeſtic ſtep, temper'd with ſo peculiar a ſweetneſs of voice, never fail'd to tranſport the moſt ruſtic and inſenſible into admiration. In comedy ſhe diſcover'd ſuch a winning air, ſuch a ſprightly and becoming gayety, and ſo happy an addreſs, that neither eyes were ſatisfied with ſeeing her, nor hands weary of applauding.

Another.

Faſhion'd alike by nature and by art,
To pleaſe, engage, and int'reſt ev'ry heart:
In publick life, by all who ſaw, approv'd;
In private life, by all who knew her lov'd.

OLDFIELD lies here retir'd, undreſt,
The curtain drawn, her part is done;
Ye that remain to act your beſt,
Muſt alſo make your exit ſoon;
How happy then, if worthy praiſe,
Ye can ſuch laſting plaudits raiſe!

WHen lately you invited me,
With Carteret I din'd;
And in return, moſt gen'rouſly
To Onſlow I reſign'd.

On Opportunity we ſeize,
For ſearch the Nation round,

EPIGRAM on a LADY, ſtung by a BEE.

TO heal the wound the Bee had made upon my Delia's face,
Its honey to the wound ſhe laid,
and bid me kiſs the place.

Pleas'd I obey'd, and from the wound
ſuck'd both the ſweet and ſmart:
The honey on my lips I found,
the ſting went thro' my heart.

JANUARY, 1731.

Friday, January 1.

THEIR Majeſties received the compliments of the Nobility for the New-Year; among the reſt, of the Lord Carteret, who was graciouſly receiv'd.

At the ſame time the Ode for the Day, compos'd by Colly Cibber, Eſq; Poet-laureat, was perform'd; the Muſick by Mr. Eccles, and the vocal by Mr Hughs, Mr. Gates, &c. [See the ſaid Ode, p. 20, and Remarks on it, p. 10, 11.

Forty mathematical Boys, educated in Chriſt's Hoſpital, in the ſchool founded by K. C. II. were, according to annual Cuſtom, preſented to his Majeſty.

His Majeſty order'd 30 l. per. Ann. to be paid out of the Treaſury towards the ſupport of the Poor of the Pariſh of St. Mary le Strand.

Saturday, Jan. 2.

Great talk of an Experiment to be made on Charles Ray in Newgate, a Malefactor repriev'd on that Occaſion. It was ſaid to be in order to diſcover whether Deafneſs is not to be cured by purging. The Tympanum was to be cut by an Inſtrument, in order to demonſtrate whether the Hearing proceeds from the Tympanum, or the Nerves that lie between that and the Conceptor of the Ear; it being the Opinion of ſome that Deafneſs is principally occaſion'd by Obſtructions in the ſaid Nerves, See p. 10, 18, 19.

Geo. Burrington, Eſq; Gov. of North Carolina, ſet out to embark for his Government.

Sunday, Jan. 3.

Dr. Greenwood, newly appointed Chaplain, preached before their Majeſties, the Pr. of Wales, and three eldeſt Princeſſes, at the Chapel-roy l at St. James's; the Nobility attended in their Robes and Collars, and the Duke of Dorſet Lord Lieut. of Ireland carried the Sword of State.

Monday, Jan. 4.

The Lady Chaplin, Relict of Sir John Chaplin, of Tathwel in Lincolnſhire, Bar. brought to bed of a Daughter. This Lady had a Writ de Ventre inſpiciendo iſſued againſt her ſome Months ago, by the Heirs at Law; and by her not having an Heir Male, 3000 l. per. ann. deſcends with the Title to Thomas Chaplin, Eſq; and an Eſtate of about 2000 l. per. ann. to Sir John's two Siſters, after a 3d Share to Mrs. Chaplin.

Advice came of 3 Incendiaries, or as there call'd, Briſtol Firemen, being taken up at Barnſtaple, and conducted to Exeter Gaol. One was handſomely dreſs'd, and had a conſiderable Sum about him.

Two Hundred Recruits ſent from the Savoy, to reinforce the Garriſons of Gibraltar and Port Mahon.

Tueſday, Jan. 5.

Wedneſday, Jan. 6.

This being Twelfth-day, his Majeſty, the Prince of Wales, and the Kts Companions of the Garter, Thiſtle, and Bath, appeared in the Collars of their reſpective Orders. Their Majeſties, the Prince of Wales, and three eldeſt Princeſſes, preceded by the Heralds, &c. went to the Chapel-royal, and heard Divine Service. The D. of Manche- ſter

cheſter carried the Sword of ſtate. The King and Prince made the offerings at the altar, of gold, frankincenſe and myrrh, according to annual cuſtom. At night their Majeſties, &c. play'd at Hazard with the nobility, for the benefit of the Groom-porter; and 'twas ſaid the K. won 600 guineas, the Q. 360. Pr. Amelia 20, Pr. Carolina 10, the E. of Portmore, and D. of Grafton ſeveral thouſands.

At night Mr. Sharpleſs, high conſtable of Holborn diviſion, together with ſeveral of his petty conſtables went to ſearch a notorious gaming-houſe behind Grays-Inn-walks, by vertue of a warrant under the hands and ſeals of the Rt. Hn. Ld. Delawar and eleven other of his Majeſty's juſtices of the peace for the County of Middleſex, but the gameſters having previous notice, they all fled, except the maſter of the houſe, who was apprehended, and bound in a recognizance of 200 l. penalty, purſuant to the old ſtatute of 33 H. VIII.

It may be ſome ſort of amuſement to preſent our readers with the following liſt of officers eſtabliſhed in the moſt notorious gaming houſes.

1. A Commiſſioner, always a proprietor, who looks in of a night, and the week's accompt is audited by him and two others of the proprietors.

2. A Director, who ſuperintends the Room.

3. An Operator, who deals the cards at a cheating game called Faro.

4. Two Croupers, who watch the cards, and gather the money for the Bank.

5. Two Puffs, who have money given them to decoy others to play.

6. A Clerk, who is a check upon the puffs, to ſee that they ſink none of the money that is given them to play with.

7. A Squib, is a puff of a lower rank, who ſerves at half ſalary, while he is learning to deal.

8. A Flaſher, to ſwear how often the bank has been ſtript.

9. A Dunner, who goes about to recover money loſt at play.

10. A Waiter, to fill out wine, ſnuff candles, and attend in the gaming room.

11. An Attorney, a Newgate ſollicitor.

13. An Uſher, who lights gentlemen up and down ſtairs, and gives the word to the Porter.

14. A Porter, who is generally a ſoldier of the foot guards.

15. An Orderly man, who walks up and down the outſide of the door, to give notice to the porter, and alarm the houſe, at the approach of the conſtables.

16. A Runner, who is to get intelligence of the juſtices meeting.

17. Link-boys, Coachmen, Chairmen, Drawers, or others, who bring the firſt intelligence of the juſtices meetings, or of the conſtables being out, at half a guinea reward.

18. Common bail, Affidavit-men, Ruffians, Bravoes, Aſſaſſins, cum multis aliis.

At a meeting of the ſociety for propagating chriſtian knowledge, held at Edinburgh, the ſeveral officers for the year enſuing were choſen, the ſtock amounted to £2,563 l. 11 s. 5 d. number of ſchools, 132; and they reſolved to ſend three miſſionaries to preach the Goſpel to the Indians on the borders of New-England; to which they are encouraged by a gift of Dr. Daniel Williams, late a presbyterian miniſter in England.

Thurſday, Jan. 8.

Charles du Bois, choſen governor of the corporation for ſmelting down lead with ſea-coal and pit-coal. And Samuel Beachcroft, Eſq; deputy-governor of the ſame.

Mr Franklin was taken into cuſtody for printing and publiſhing the Craftſman of the ſame day; as were likewiſe 3 perſons for publiſhing it.

Ended the ſeſſions for Weſtminſter, when Sir J Gonſon was again choſen chairman, and deſired to print his charge.

Terence Magrahe, a young man in the French intereſt, having inveigled many Iriſh papiſts to enter into that ſervice, and it being ſoon known by their refuſing to work, the magiſtrates of Birr in Ireland, aſſembled a Poſſe to ſecure them, but they were not able to apprehend above three, the reſt eſcaped with their Captain, and took ſhipping near Dublin.

Saturday, Jan. 9.

The new-born ſon and heir of W. Pulteney, Eſq; baptized by the name of William; the E. of Berkeley, and E. of Winchelſea and Nottingham, being Godfathers, and the Dutcheſs-dowager of Marlborough Godmother.

Sunday, Jan. 10.

Friday, Jan. 15.

Began the ſeſſions at the Old baily, when Mr Maynee, a clerk to the Bank was arraigned upon two indictments for eraſing and altering 2 bank notes, and pleaded guilty, upon which the Statute was read that makes it felony without benefit of clergy. See p. 216, 403.

His Majeſty order'd 2 penſion of 20 l. per Ann. to ſuch of the late King's ſupearannuated livery ſervants who are not provided for on the preſent eſtabliſhment.

Cork, Jan. 15. This day one Tim. Croneen was, for the murder and robbery of Mr. St. Leger and his wife at Bally volane, ſentenc'd to be hang'd 2 minutes, then his head to be cut off, his bowels to be taken out and thrown in his face; and his body divided in 4 quarters to be placed in 4 croſs ways. He was ſervant to Mr. Leger, and committed the murder with the privity of Joan Condon the ſervant maid, who was ſentenced to be burnt, alſo of the gardener, whom he knock'd on the head to deprive him of his ſhare of the booty. When he was taken, he ſaid he would have all catholick ſervants uſe their proteſtant maſters ſo, if they would merit heaven. But after Trial, made the following declaration. The Devil was too great with me, I firſt reſolved only to rob my Maſter, but when I went into the room ſhot him in his Bed, and gave my Miſtreſs 5 ſtabs. The Gardener conſented to go with me and held the Candle. I took 20 l. and the watch out of my Maſters pocket, and then rode off, (having firſt kill'd the gardener, and given the maid a ſmall ſhare of the money.)

Sunday, Jan. 17.

Melancholy Effects of Credulity in Witchcraft.

From Burlington in Penſilvania we have an acount, that the owners of ſeveral Cattle believing them to be bewitch'd, cauſed ſome ſuſpected men and women to be taken up, and trials to be made for detecting them. Above 300 people aſſembled near the governor's houſe, and a pair of ſcales being erected, the ſuſpected perſons were each weigh'd againſt a large Bible; but all of them vaſtly outweighing it, the accuſed were then to be tied head and feet together, and put into a river, on ſuppoſition that if they ſwam they muſt be guilty. This trial they offer'd to undergo, in caſe as many of their accuſers ſhould be ſerved in the like manner; which being done, they all ſwam very buoyant, to the no ſmall diverſion of the ſpectators, and clearing of the accuſed.— This has revived a like tranſaction in Somerſetſhire in Sept. laſt, and another in France.

The firſt is from Frome publiſh'd in the Daily Journal, Jan. 15. relating, That a child of one Wheeler being ſeized with ſtrange unaccountable fits, the mother goes to a Cunning Man, who adviſ'd her to hang a bottle of the child's water, mix'd with ſome of it's hair, cloſe ſtopt over the fire, that the witch would thereupon come and break it: Does not mention the ſucceſs, but a poor old woman, in the neighbourhood, was taken up, and the old trial by Water Ordeal reviv'd. They dragg'd her, ſhivering with an ague, out of her houſe, ſet her aſtride on the pomel of a ſaddle, and carried her about two miles to a mill-pond, ſtript off her upper cloaths, tied her legs, and with a rope about her middle, threw her in, 200 ſpectators huzzaing ing and abetting the riot. They affirm ſhe ſwam like a cork, tho' forced ſeveral times under water; and no wonder, for when they ſtrained the line, the ends whereof were held on each ſide of the pond, ſhe muſt of neceſſity riſe; but by haling her from one bank to t'other, and often plunging, ſhe drank water enough, and when almoſt ſpent, they poured in brandy to revive her, they drew her to a ſtable, threw her on ſome litter in her wet cloaths, where in about an hour after ſhe expired. The coroner upon his Inqueſt cou'd make no diſcovery of the ring-leaders, altho' above 40 Perſons aſſiſted in the Fact, yet none of them could be perſuaded to accuſe his Neighbour: ſo that they were able to charge only 3 of them with Man-ſlaughter.

The like Credulity in witchcraft occaſion'd a tragical Accident at a Village near Mortagne in France, in December laſt. A Man of that Village had been long ill of a Diſtemper which puzzled the Phyſicians; whereupon his Wife believ'd he was bewitch'd, and conſulted a pretended Conjurer, who ſhew'd her the Wizard (her husband's uncle) in a glaſs of Water, and told her, that, to oblige him to with-draw the Charm, they muſt beat him, and burn the Soles of his Feet. On her Return ſhe ſent for the Uncle, and notwithſtanding his Proteſtations, with the Aſſiſtance of her Relations, beat him unmercifully, and burnt the Soles of his Feet, and the Crown of his Head in ſuch a manner, that in two Days after he died. The Woman and her Accomplices were ſeized; ſhe own'd the Fact, and ſaid, if it was to do again, ſhe would do it. See p. 358.

Extraordinary Accidents, and Caſualties.

A barbarous Murder was committed the 4th Inſt. at Night, on John Williams Carpenter of Cumback in Radnorſhire, by ſtabbing him in the Throat with a Knife, and beating out his Brains with an Ax: His Door being left latch'd, and the Key in the thatch as uſual, and no Robbery committed. It was not diſcover'd till the 7th, when his only Brother William came, and in the preſence of abundance of Neighbours, owned the bloody Knife, which together with the waſhing of his bloody Cloaths by his ſweetheart the Night the Murder was committed, and no body to get by his Brother's death but himſelf, caus'd him to be apprehended, and ſent to Preſteign Goal; and his Sweetheart was bound to appear againſt him. See p. 178.

From Dijon in France, 'tis written, that a Perſon having with drawn himſelf, his Relations charg'd one who was his ſworn Enemy with his murder, and examin'd him with ſuch exquiſite tortures, that, to ſhorten them he confeſs'd the crime: whereupon he was broke alive, and two others as his accomplices were hanged. The Man ſuppos'd to be murder'd, ſoon after return'd home.

Bruſſels 25. O. S. About 2 o'Clock this morning, a dreadful fire broke out in the Arch Dutcheſs's palace, which with the goods and furniture, and Royal Chapel were laid in aſhes in leſs than 12 hours. Bourdeaux, Jan. 24. N. S. Forty monks dy'd here in one Night; upon enquiry to diſcover the cauſe, a dead Viper was found in a Cask of Wine they had regal'd themſelves with, ſuppos'd to have come in at the bung-hole.

Morlaix, in lower Bretagne, Jan. 11. N. S. By a fire which broke out in the hoſpital, the whole town was burnt down; the People were reduc'd to the greateſt hardſhips.

Several

Several nuns have dy'd ſuddenly at Engi.n, five leagues from Bruſſels, their Bodies were open'd, but no marks of Contagion or Poiſon appearing, ſome weak People believed it muſt be by witchcraft, but they could not tell whom to accuſe. However, the ſurviving ſiſters quitted the Cloyſters, and with the Bp's conſent return'd to their Friends.

The following Narrative, given by a Gentleman of unexceptionable Honour and Veracity, has been lately publiſhed at Edinburgh.

ONE William Sutor, Aged about 37, a Farmer in Middle-mauſe (belonging to the Laird of Balgown near Craighal,) being about the month of December, 1728, in the fields with his ſervants, near his own houſe, over heard at ſome diſtance, as it were, an uncommon skreeking and noiſe; and they following the Voice, fancied they ſaw a dark gray-colour'd Dog; but as it was dark night, they concluded it was a Fox, and accordingly were for ſetting on their Dogs: but it was very obſerveable, that not one of them would ſo much as point his Head that way.

About a month after, the ſaid Sutor being occaſionally in the ſame ſpot, and much about the ſame time of Night, it appear'd to him again, and in paſſing, touched him ſo ſmartly on the Thigh, that he felt a pain all that Night.

In December 1729, it again caſt up to him at about the ſame place, and paſt him at ſome diſtance.

In June 1730, it appeared to him as formerly: And it was now he began to judge it was ſomething extraordinary.

On the laſt Monday of Nov. 1730, about ſky-ſetting, as he was coming from Drumlochy this officious viſiter paſſed him as formerly, and in paſſing, he diſtinctly heard it ſpeak theſe words, Within eight or ten days do or die; and inſtantly diſappear'd, leaving him not a little perplex'd.

Next morning he came to his brother James's houſe, and gave him a particular account of all that had happen'd: And that night, about 10 of the clock, theſe two brothers having been viſiting their ſiſter at Glanballow, and returning home, ſtept aſide to ſee the remarkable ſpot, where they had no ſooner arriv'd, then it appear'd to William, who pointing his finger to it, deſired his brother and a ſervant who was with them, to look to it; but neither of them could ſee any ſuch thing.

Next Saturday evening, as William was at his ſheep-fold, it came up to him, and audibly utter'd theſe Words Come to the ſpot of ground within half an hour. Whereupon he went home, and taking a Sword and a ſtaff in his hand, came to the ground, being at laſt determin'd to ſee the Iſſue. He had ſcarce encircled himſelf with a line of circumvallation, when his troubleſome familiar came up to him, he ask'd it, In the name of God, who are you? It anſwer'd, I am David Sutor, George Sutor's Brother: I killed a Man, more than 35 years ago, at a buſh by Eaſt the road as you go into the Iſle. He ſaid to it, David Sutor was a Man, and you appear as a Dog. It anſwer'd I killed him with a Dog, and am made to ſpeak out of the mouth of a Dog: and I tell you to go bury theſe Bones.

This coming to the ears of the Miniſter of Blair, the Lairds of Glaſcloon and Rychaltie, &c. about 40 Men, went together to the ſaid Iſle; but after opening ground in ſeveral places, found no Bones.

On the 23d of Decemb. about midnight, when William was in bed, it came to his door, and ſaid, Come away: you will find the bones at the ſide of the withe'd Buſh, and there are but 8 left; and told him at the ſame time for a ſign, that he would find the the print of a Croſs impreſs'd on the Ground.

Next day William and his brother, with about 40 or 50 people who had conveen'd out of curioſity, came to the place, where they diſcover'd the buſh, and the croſs by it; and upon digging the ground about a foot down found the eight bones: All which they immediately wrapt in clean linen, and being put in a coffin with a mort-cloth over it, were interr'd that evening in the church-yard of Blair, attended by about 100 Perſons.

N. B. Several People in that Country remember to have ſeen this David Sutor; and that he liſted for a Soldier, and went abroad about 34 or 35 years ago.

Remarkable ADVERTISEMENTS.

IN the Gazette, Jan. 30. 'tis adverti's'd, that in July 1729, at Bentworth in the County of Southampton, a barn was ſet on fire, and the corn and grain therein, the Stables and out-houſes adjoining were entirely burnt. Several meſſuages in the ſaid pariſh have ſince been conſumed in the ſame manner, and Bentworth, it ſelf threatned to be laid in aſhes; his Majeſty's pardon is promiſed to any one that would diſcover his Accomplice.

In the Gazette of the ſame date, 'tis advertis'd, that the widows of ſuch half-pay Officers as ſerv'd, and to whom they were marry'd in the year 1716, may receive their proportions of the ſum of 1500 l. granted the laſt Seſſions of Parliament for that purpoſe.

London Evening Poſt, Jan. 28th. 'tis advertis'd from Whitehaven, that a veſſel ſailed for London, laden with the late Mr. Wood's ore, coals, cinders, and lime-ſtone, to be carried to Chelſea, to give a Specimen that iron is to be made from the ore and pit-coal. A reaſon is demanded why Chelſea, that produces neither, is a better place to make iron, than the neighbourhood of Whitehaven, where there is plenty of both, unleſs there was deſign of impoſing upon the World?

Any poor perſon may be cured of the Ague gratis, by a doſe only, which may be contained in a gill-glaſs, and never known to fail. To be had of Mr. Sam. Tripland, at the Coach-maker's Arms in Great-windmil-ſtreet, over-againſt the Hay-market.

Letters patent were granted to Mr. G. Kettle of Southwark, for making and dying of hats and ruffs of different colours, except black.

Foreign Affairs.

WE think it a proper introduction to the hiſtory of the year newly begun, to give our readers a tranſient view of the ſituation of Affairs at the concluſion of the laſt; and as we find this ready done to our hands in the Poſt-Boy, Dec. 31. we ſhall make no apology for epitomizing his eſſay upon that Subject.

The Clouds in which the fate of Europe was obſcur'd at the cloſe of the Year 1729, are not yet diſſipated, notwithſtanding the efforts of politicians, the number of Negotiations, and the union of four of the moſt formidable powers in Europe, by the Treaty of Seville.

The allies of Seville now ſee in what advantageous ſituation the treaty of Utrecht has put the Emperor in Italy. We find that the Empire, which in the reign of Leopold, could not ſend 20,000 men to the Rhine or Flanders, without ſubſidies from England or Holland, can ſend 20,000 men to Italy, and maintain them there without aſſiſtance, its revenue amounting to no leſs than 15 millions of Florins a year. She now employs her Powers to baffle the projects of thoſe who rais'd her to this grandeur: Projects whoſe only drift is the Execution of a treaty, wherein the Imperial court is one of the principal parties contracting, which treaty was made with two views. The firſt was an addition to the power of the Emperor in Italy, by bringing under her obedience the two Sicilies. The ſecond clear'd up Spain for the loſſes ſhe had ſuſtain'd ſuſtain'd, particularly in the fine branches lopt from that crown, by ſecuring to one of her Infantes the uncertain hope of two ſucceſſions.

The catholick king and his allies do not undertake or ask any thing that the Imperial court has juſt reaſon to complain of.

The reaſons alledg'd by the Imperialiſts for their complaints are, that an alteration had been made in one ſingle article of the quadruple alliance, which ſet forth the manner of ſecuring to the Infante of Spain the eventual ſucceſſion which had been promis'd him. But,

1. This alteration is of no great importance, becauſe the 6000 neutral troops which by the treaty of London were to be garriſon'd in Tuſcany and Parma, by the treaty of Seville are only turn'd into Spaniards, which are in ſome ſort made neutral by being diſcharg'd from the oath to their ſovereign, and made to take an oath to the Great Duke, and Duke of Parma.

2. This alteration does no prejudice to the Emperor, or threaten him with any hereafter, becauſe his ſtrict and religous obſervation of treaties will not ſuffer him to oppoſe the Infante's promis'd ſucceſſion; nor will the bona fide of the king of Spain let him employ his 6000 Spaniards on any deſign but what is ſtipulated by the treaty of Seville.

3. This alteration was not made without ſubſtantial reaſons. The Imperialiſts always oppoſed the motion for putting Spaniards in garriſon in the towns of Tuſcany and Parma; and were averſe even to the admiſſion of neutral troops; upon which the allies paſſed the 4th article of the treaty of Seville.

This article was the ſubject of the late Negotiations. The reſolution of the Imperial court to admit of no deviation from the treaty of Quadruple alliance; and that of the court of Spain never to conſent to any alteration in the treaty of Seville, occaſion'd the preparations for war all the laſt ſummer, but ended in preparations offenſive and defenſive, and were kept from breaking into action by the thread of negotiation; and the opening of this ſcene is reſerved for the year we are now entering upon; but hitherto Things remain in the ſame ſituation, Jan. 30.

Conſtantinople. Since the great revolution made here by the Janizaries in cutting to pieces the late Vizier, Capigi Aga, Capt Baſhaw, and Mufti, &c. and afterwards depoſing Sultan Achmet, and raiſing the new Sultan (whoſe father was depos'd in 1703) to the throne; there has been no ſettled government. For upon divers pretences theſe tumultuous rebels were frequently up in arms, demanding ſeveral new regulations; particularly the promoting of their favourites, and the removal or death of thoſe who were obnoxious to 'em. All which was comply'd with in order to appeaſe them: But this procedure not ſatisfying them, and they ſtill continuing mutinous, the Grand Segnior under pretence of holding a general council, got the chief of 'em into his palace, cut 'em all off with their ſervants; and about 7000 of their followers were ſtrangled, to the great joy of this city; theſe rebellious people grew ſo inſolent, as to tax families what ſums they pleas'd, and even to plunder in the ſtreet: But now every thing is reduc'd to the old Ottoman rules of government.

Moſcow, Jan. 8. Advices from Derbent ſay, that the princes of Georgia paſſed that place, in their way home much pleaſed with the honours they have received from this court, and that one of them, who lives near mount Arrarat, had promis'd to ſend the Empreſs a relique of Noah's Ark.

Venice, 'Tis currently reported that this republick will equip a ſquadron of twenty Ships of war, to put to ſea early next ſpring, to watch the motions of the Turks.

Vienna, Jan. 20. Our hopes of an accommodation with Spain encreaſe daily.

Paris. New propoſals of accommodation are negotiating with Spain and the Emperor; and 'tis thought with a fair proſpect of ſucceſs.

Swiſſerland, Bern. Proviſion is making in all the proteſtant cantons for the reception of a great number of Waldenſes, who are depriv'd of their liberties and drove from their habitations, by their ſovereign the duke of Savoy.

Vienna. There are privately handed about here copies of the Ultimatum (or laſt propoſals) of the allies of Seville, as tranſmitted hither from Paris; the ſubſtance of which is as follows.

1. They would ſtipulate by a ſecret article not to oppoſe the ſettlement of Succeſſion which the Emperor might make for his Territories in Italy, and which ſhould be freely accepted by the States thereof; and they would engage to guaranty that Settlement.

2. They would ſtipulate by a ſecret article, that they would not oppoſe the advantages of Succeſſion, which the Emperor, with the conſent of the different States of Italy, might procure in favour of the archdutcheſs his daughter; and contribute to maintain what he ſhall ſo eſtabliſh for his daughters, or for any one he ſhall pitch upon, with regard to his Territories in Italy; and even to guaranty what may be eſtabliſhed by the Emperor in conſequence of that Settlement.

Seville, Jan. 16. Couriers are continually arriving upon the heels of one another, which occaſion frequent councils.

Hague. About the latter end of this month their High Mightineſſes wrote a letter to the United Provinces, for the celebration of the 28th of Feb. as a day of ſolemn thankſgiving, faſting and prayer, which imports in ſubſtance, That altho' it has pleas'd God, in his infinite patience and clemency, that we have enjoy'd peace laſt year, this peace was nevertheleſs attended with ſo much uneaſineſs and difficulty, in relation to the ſmall ſucceſs of the negotiations ſet on foot for terminating amicably the differences in Europe, and eſtabliſhing a general tranquillity, that we are ſtill in a very uncertain and difficult ſituation, and have great reaſon to fear that a war may at laſt happen, wherein this State may be engag'd, contrary to its inclination: That our apprehenſion in this reſpect increaſes ſo much the more when we conſider, that notwithſtanding all the bleſſings which it hath pleaſed God to ſhower down upon our dear Country, the ſins and iniquities thereof, far from diminiſhing, increaſe daily, to ſuch a degree, that laſt year horrible, abominable ſins appear'd, almoſt unknown before in this Country; and that we ought to fear, that the patience of the Lord, juſtly provok'd, ceaſing, his Judgments may at laſt fall upon our dear Country, unleſs we endeavour to prevent them, by an unfeigned repentance and converſion.

THis is a month of great work for the gardener.

In the kitchen-garden renew the heat of your hot-beds with freſh dung, and continue to ſow cucumbers and melons as in the former month.

Make a large hot-bed for forward rhadiſhes, and ſpring carrots; they may be ſown together, becauſe the rhadiſhes be drawn in March, whereby they will make room for the carrots. The bed muſt be cover'd with earth 7 or 8 inches thick, and defended with mats, ſupported with hoops.

Make a hot-bed for Batterſey kidney-beans, and all ſorts of annuals, except African and French marigold, which may be deferr'd 10 or 20 days. About the middle of the month, upon a declining hot-bed ſow colly-flower ſeeds; alſo in the natural ground peaſe, beans, parſley, ſpinach, carrots, parſnips, turnips, onions, leeks, Dutch brown lettuce, and aſparagus-ſeeds.

Sow skerrits in light rich ground, where they may have moiſture.

Plant garlick, ſhalots, and rockambole, for increaſe, in light ground.

Tranſplant young cabbage-plants for a crop.

Make plantations of ſtraw-berries, rasberries, gooſe-berries, currants, and roſes.

Elm-ſetts ſhould now be gather'd from the roots of large trees, and planted in nurſery-beds, and young plantations ſhould be now provided with all ſorts of foreſt-trees and ſhrubs, which are propagated from ſlips or layers.

Set acorns of the Ilex, cork-tree, Engliſh oak, cheſnuts, and walnuts.

Sow the ſameria of the elm, and bay berries, all which come up the firſt year.

Lay branches of ſeveral trees to take root. This is the beſt time to raiſe any thing that will grow of ſlips.

Prune fruit-trees and vines, for now is your ſeaſon to bind, plaſh, nail, and dreſs, without danger of froſts. This is to be underſtood of the moſt tender and delicate wall-fruits not finiſh'd before: do this before the buds and bearers grow turgid; and yet in the neſtarine and like delicate mural fruit, the later the better, notwithſtanding what has been, and ſtill is the contrary cuſtom.

The latter end of this month is moſt proper to graft pears and plums of all ſorts; and ſome likewiſe graft apples and cherries in the cleft, tho' others defer apples longer. The cyons cut off from the trees laſt month, are now to be uſed, without having any regard to the notion of the age of the moon.

Now, as well as in October, may be planted the eſpaliers of pears, plums, or apples, ſo uſeful as well as profitable in a garden; for being planted a convenient diſtance from a fruit wall, they are an admirable defence againſt blighting winds, and produce noble fruit.

Rub moſs from trees after a ſhower of rain; ſcrape and cleanſe them from cankers, &c. Cut and lay quick-ſets, and trim up palaſade hedges.

Earth up the roots of uncover'd fruit-trees, and drain ſuperfluous moiſture from roots of trees. Lay bird-lime for the bird called the tit, or tit-mouſe, which is a deſtructive enemy to dwarf-pears and plums in this and the preceding month, by deſtroying the buds.

The beginning of this month you may ſow auricula ſeeds in caſes fill'd with light earth, and the ſeeds of the polyanthois in ſome ſhady border.

Tranſplant all ſorts of flowering ſhrubs, which bear the weather; as roſes, jeſſamine, hony-ſuckle, laburnum, lelac, ſyringa, ſpipeas, altheas, &c. You may make layers of roſes, pomegranates, phillyrea, laurus tinus, and other ſhrubs.

Cut the Spaniſh jeſſamine within 4 inches inches of the ſtem, giving them freſh earth, likewiſe give freſh earth to your carnations planted out in Autumn. Towards the latter end ſow lark-ſpurs, hollyhocks, Canterbury bells, primroſe-tree, ſweet-williams, annual ſtocks, candy-tufts, pinks, &c.

Make plantations of the lilly of the valley on the ſide of ſome ſhady bank. Sow orange and lemon kernels in pots; ſet the pots in hot-beds; the kernels are to be uſed as ſoon as taken out of the fruit. Shift ſuch myrtles as require large pots, at the ſame time ſhaving off the outſide fibres of their root, and if there be occaſion, prune their heads pretty cloſe. Turn and skreen Mould for the uſe of next month, and continue to roll gravel-walks after rain and froſt.

IT has been unexceptionably advanced, that a good Abridgment of the Law is more intelligible than the Statutes at large; so a nice Model is as entertaining as the Original, and a true Specimen as satisfactory as the whole Parcel: This may serve to illustrate the Reasonableness of our present Undertaking, which in the first place is to give Monthly a View of all the Pieces of Wit, Humour, or Intelligence, daily offer'd to the Publick in the News-Papers, (which of late are so multiply'd, as to render it impossible, unless a man makes it a business, to consult them all) and in the next place we shall join therewith some other matters of Use or Amusement that will be communicated to us.

Upon calculating the Number of News-Papers, 'tis found that (besides divers written Accounts) no less than 200 Half-sheets per Month are thrown from the Press only in London, and about as many printed elsewhere in the Three Kingdoms; a considerable Part of which constantly exhibit Essays on various Subjects for Entertainment; and all the rest, occasionally oblige their Readers with matters of Public Concern, communicated to the World by Persons of Capacity thro' their Means: so that they are become the chief Channels of Amusement and Intelligence. But then being only loose Papers, uncertainly scatter'd about, it often happens, that many things deserving Attention, contained in them, are only seen by Accident, and others not sufficiently publish'd or preserved for universal Benefit and Information.

This Consideration has induced several Gentlemen to promote a Monthly Collection, to treasure up, as in a Magazine, the most remarkable Pieces on the Subjects abovemention'd, or at least impartial Abridgments thereof, as a Method much better calculated to preserve those Things that are curious, than that of transcribing.

In pursuance whereof, and the great Encouragement already given, this WORK will be regularly continued, shall appear earlier, and contain more than any other Monthly Book of the same Price.

As all possible Care will be taken to avoid the Mistakes incident to undertakings of this kind, so the Author will think himself oblig'd to such Persons who shall give him a true state of any Transaction erroneously publish'd in the Papers, or shall please to communicate any Pieces of Wit or Entertainment proper to be inserted; directing for him at the Printer's at St. John's Gate, near Hicks's-Hall, where any Persons sending proper Orders, may have the Numbers sent them, at their first coming out, without further Trouble, whether in Town or Country.
